

The Communication Wins Log

A running record of every time your child got a message across — in any form. Words count. So do signs, devices, gestures, pulling you by the hand, and handing you the empty cup. Every attempt is progress, and it all belongs on this page.

Two reasons to keep this. On hard days, the log is proof of motion — flip back a month and you'll see it in your own handwriting. And it's genuinely useful data: a speech therapist or BCBA can see what your child is already doing and build from there. Write down the messy attempts too — especially the messy attempts. Pairs with the parent notebook on our website.

| Date | What they communicated | How — word · sign · device · gesture · behavior | How we responded |
|------|------------------------|-------------------------------------------------|------------------|
|      |                        |                                                 |                  |
|      |                        |                                                 |                  |
|      |                        |                                                 |                  |
|      |                        |                                                 |                  |
|      |                        |                                                 |                  |
|      |                        |                                                 |                  |
|      |                        |                                                 |                  |
|      |                        |                                                 |                  |
|      |                        |                                                 |                  |
|      |                        |                                                 |                  |
|      |                        |                                                 |                  |

A full page here is a month of your child reaching for you, in their own way. Keep it somewhere you'll see it on the hard days.